

AFP | China Economics Correspondent

The international newswire Agence France-Presse (AFP) is looking for an enterprising Anglophone journalist to join its team in Beijing as a correspondent covering China's economy and businesses.

The role includes covering daily breaking news and writing longer, more in-depth analyses and features, involving some travel around China. The bureau also covers Mongolia.

This is an opportunity for a journalist who wants to develop his or her own stories for a major news agency.

The trade war, Huawei, China's slowing economy, and the country's fast-growing tech industry are among the array of stories that provide the right candidate the opportunity to break news and write in-depth features about the world's second-largest economy.

AFP is looking for a fluent English speaker with the ability to speak and read Chinese.

Interested parties should submit their CV and cover letter to Laurent.thomet@afp.com
